Question	Answer
1. What is the purpose of the study?	The purpose of the study is to investigate the effect of a new teaching method on student performance.
2. What is the research design?	The research design is a quasi-experimental design with two groups: an experimental group and a control group.
3. What are the independent and dependent variables?	The independent variable is the teaching method (new vs. traditional). The dependent variable is student performance (measured by test scores).
4. What are the hypotheses?	H1: The new teaching method will result in higher student performance than the traditional method. H2: There will be no significant difference in student performance between the two groups.
5. What are the results?	The results show that the experimental group (new teaching method) achieved significantly higher test scores than the control group (traditional method).
6. What are the conclusions?	The study concludes that the new teaching method is more effective than the traditional method in improving student performance.
7. What are the limitations?	The study has several limitations, including a small sample size and a short duration of the intervention.
8. What are the implications?	The findings suggest that the new teaching method should be implemented in other classrooms to improve student performance.
9. What are the future research directions?	Future research should investigate the long-term effects of the new teaching method and its applicability in different contexts.
10. What are the references?	The references include various academic journals and books related to teaching methods and student performance.
